DEVELOPMENT OF PERIODONTAL LIGAMENT - Development Of Periodontal Ligament (FREE) The ligament forms a link between the tooth and the bone, thus providing support, protection and sensory input for the masticatory system 1. The structure of the periodontal ligament, like all fibrous connective tissues, comprises a fibrous matrix containing cells, blood vessels and nerves 2. - Fri, 12 Apr 2019 13:31:00 GMT The Periodontal Ligament: Development, Anatomy and Function Periodontal Ligament - Origin And Development | School of ... Origin and development. Some of the pluripotential cells of the dental follicle that are capable of producing bone, cementum and the ligament will be preserved as undifferentiated cells in the mature periodontal ligament, usually in a perivascular location. remodeling of the ligament begins at the cemento-enamel junction and proceeds apically. 11. Periodontium: Periodontal ligament | Pocket Dentistry The periodontal ligament is a fibrous connective tissue between the alveolar bone proper and the cementum covering the root. This ligament covers the root of the tooth and connects with the tissue of the gingiva.
