Cell Discovery: A new publishing experience Who really discovered stem cells? The history you need to ... In theory “yes”, but after much historical research including this great historical article in Cell Stem Cell, I would argue that no one group really discovered stem cells. Instead I believe the “discovery” of stem cells was an ongoing team effort over a period of many decades and there is much credit to go around. It’s show-time for stem cells Now that we can exploit hPSCs to a fuller extent, they are proving their worth. ihPSCs uniquely provide human disease-relevant cells in large numbers. 6 This is because hPSCs have an expansion capacity that most differentiated cells lack. In this way, Chen says that: “stem cells will help drug discovery by providing diverse and robust cell resources.” The cancer stem cell theory: Is it correct? The cancer stem cell hypothesis posits that tumor growth is driven by a rare subpopulation of cells, designated cancer stem cells (CSC). Studies supporting this theory are based in large part on xenotransplantation experiments wherein human cancer cells are grown in immunocompromised mice and only CSC, often constituting less than 1% of the malignancy, generate tumors.
